OPC FORMATION

One Person Company (OPC) is a type of Company under the Companies Act, 2013. OPC is a company that has only one person as to its member and another person as their nominee. It can also be said that an OPC is a blend of Proprietorship concern and a Company.

Features of OPC:

(What are key features of an OPC?)

1. Sole member:

There can be only one member i.e. shareholder in an OPC.

2. Nominee of the sole member:

It is mandatory to appoint a person as a nominee for the sole member. A minor i.e. a person less than 18 years of age cannot be a member or even a nominee in an OPC.

3. Minimum directors:

An OPC can be set up with just one director, however, there can be a maximum of 15 directors. The sole member can also become a director of the OPC.

4. No minimum capital requirement:

There is no minimum capital requirement to set up an OPC. Hence, the initial capital of the OPC can be as per your requirements.

5. Exemptions under Companies Act:

To ease management and to promote OPC's, under Companies Act, 2013, there are various exemptions for an OPC.

6. Board meetings:

It is mandatory to hold one board meeting in each half of a calendar year. Also, the gap between two board meetings should not be less than 90 days. This is not applicable to OPC's where there is only one director

7. Separate legal entity:

Even though there is only one member in an OPC, still the OPC has a separate legal entity just like a private or a public company.

8. Restrictions on type and business:

An OPC cannot be converted or formed as a Section 8/not-for-profit company. Also, an OPC cannot carry out Non-Banking Financial Investment activities.

Due to its constitutional structure an OPC enjoys various benefits such as:

1. Limited liability:

Instead of being a sole proprietorship concern whose liability is unlimited, the single person can set up an OPC which has limited liability which is to the extent of shares held by them on the OPC. A proprietor's personal assets can be attached to their business for recovery of losses, but as OPC is a separate entity, the shareholders liability is limited to his/her share value.

2. Fewer compliances:

As compared to a Private or a Public company, an OPC has to fulfill fewer compliances.

3. Cost effective:

Due to few compliances' costs such as government fees on form filing, stamp duty on the same, documentation costs are reasonably less as compared to a private or a public company.

4. Controlling rights:

As there is only one shareholder or member, the controlling rights are entirely with the sole shareholder. Also, the sole shareholder can be the sole director of the OPC, which gives additional controlling rights. For example as there is only one shareholder he alone can take decision and if he/she is also the director then this will help in getting dual approval.

5. Quick decisions:

As there is only one shareholder and if he/she is appointed as director, this will take care of the compliance of minimum director's requirement, and will help in taking
